Aha! A flash of insight comes to you as you study the solutions to the last two puzzles. You get up from the bench and head deeper into town, taking the newspaper with you.

Ten minutes later, after dodging aimless pedestrians and inattentive traffic, you come to the plaza area containing the statue you were thinking of. And sure enough, in the direction the statue is facing, you see a closed door with a note on it.

You walk towards the door, climbing the flagstone steps in front of the building. You try the door, and aren't surprised to find it locked. The door's clearly being watched, because the next thing you hear is a whispered "Password?" on the intercom.

You turn back to the note without answering. It simply says: Kids page. Hmmm. You start flicking through your newspaper, searching for something that looks like children's activities.
